Mr. Shultz, during the first meeting of a senior U.S. official with the guerrilla organization, is expected to raise the issue of the group's commitment to violence as well as its close affiliation with the South African Communist Party. NEW YORK - President Ronald Reagan, fighting to revive his presidency with his sixth State of the Union message, prepared Tues-day to address a nation that is deeply skeptical that he can achieve his goals and doubtful that he is telling the truth about Iran and the Nicaraguan rebels, the latest New York Times/CBS News Poll shows.

The portrait of America offered by the poll of 1,590 adults, interviewed by telephone, is one of uncertainty and contradiction. Americans are generally self-satisfied and believe their own lives will imMr. Reagan, who was to make his was lying about the Iran-contra afpercent thought he could; 71 perprove over the next half decade. nationally broadcast address to fair, a third still called him more cent thought he could not. they were last year or the year before, and somewhat less trusting of the government and of the presi-

The poll, conducted Jan. 18 to 21, found that Mr. Reagan had stopped the precipitous decline in his popularity that followed the revelations last fall that profits from arms sales to Iran had been diverted to the Nicaraguan insurgents, known as contras.

But the poil's results showed that

But they are less optimistic about Congress on Tuesday night, has honest than most public figures. the country's economic future than lost some of the 65 percent support he had a year ago. In this poll, 52 percent approved of his handling of his job, up from 47 percent last month. The poll had a margin of sampling error of plus or minus 3

> Americans still have a reserve of affection for the president. Half of them see him as more honest than most people in public life, even though only 33 percent said he was telling the truth about Iran. Even

As some Reagan aides have con-tended, the public appears less preoccupied with the Iran affair than it was a mouth ago.

Forty-seven percent of those surveyed said the Iran controversy was as serious as Watergate or more so; this was down from 55 percent in a survey last month.

The public expressed great doubt about Mr. Reagan's ability "to actelling the truth about Iran. Even complish his goals for the country among the 52 percent who said he in the next two years." Only 21

Among those who doubted Mr. Reagan's ability to achieve his objectives, nearly half were clearly hostile to Mr. Reagan and most of the goals of his administration. One third supported these objectives but thought he would be stymied by the Democratic-controlled Congress or a simple lack of time. The remainder were a mixed group, more sympathetic to the president himself than to his policies. Still, Mr. Reagan has reversed public opinion on one of the issues most important to him, the Strategic Defense Initiative. A majority said the anti-missile shield in space would be worth the expense. But on many other issues, the survey found that Mr. Reagan's positions lacked broad support. For example, 40 percent of the public, up from 22 percent shortly after his Reykjavik meeting last October with the Soviet leader, Mikhail S. Gorbachev, said he should give up the missile-defense plan to get a major Soviet weapons cut. Fortyseven percent, down from 62 percent, still supported his refusal to make such an agreement.

While Mr. Reagan's overall job rating improved slightly, his ratings on foreign policy did not: 34 percent of those surveyed approved of his handling of foreign policy and 52 percent disapproved.

By an overwhelming margin, 60 percent to 28 percent, Americans opposed aid to the contras fighting the government of Nicaragua, virtually the same ratio as in a Times/CBS News Poll on Nov. 30. The survey found the public strongly opposed to cuts in aid to farmers or in student loan programs as ways of cutting the deficit. A majority favors reducing military spending, which Mr. Reagan wants to increase.

On taxes, the survey offered a mixed verdict. By a 2-1 margin, Americans opposed across-theboard tax increases, a position Mr. Reagan holds strongly. But a narrow plurality would postpone tax

Held as Spy cuts for those with incomes of $50,000 or more, a position favored by some Democratic leaders.

The survey found that Americans strongly favored controls on foreign imports in the abstract, but became more skeptical - and thus came closer to Mr. Reagan's position - when possible consequences of such actions were raised.

Two-thirds said they believed it would "be a good idea to put tighter limits on imports of foreign products." But support for these limits dropped to 52 percent when respondents were asked if they would favor them even if controls meant that fewer goods would be available or that prices would go

And support for protection dropped further still, to 37 percent, when this group was asked if it would still favor import controls if they would lead other countries to retaliate against American goods.

Those polled were largely satisfied with the nation's economy currently: 55 percent rated it fairly good and 5 percent very good. When he was captured Dec. 12 outside the Punta Huete military air force base northeast of Managua, Nicaraguan officials said he was carrying maps and sketches of the base and of other nearby military installations inside his shoes.

Mr. Ortega asserted that Mr. Hall worked for the U.S. government either directly or indirectly, but American officials said they knew nothing about him.

Poorer Than the Debtors

Unpaid, allegedly unpayable debt finance essential development projects haunts the headlines, with Brazil and the simply from their own savings. Philippines now prominent, but there is less in their recent agreements with creditor governments than meets the eye. Only a small part of their debt has been rolled over, and for a short time. The acid test, negotiations with the commercial banks, is still to come. Brazil has persuaded other governments not to insist that it submit itself to an IMF stabilization program, claiming that President José Sarney has produced his own without foreign interference. His action will be successful only if it attacks the causes of hyperinflation, which is doubtful.

Brazil is merely one instance of increasingly strident demands from the bigger debtors, and of corresponding irritation among creditor banks that see little point in lending new funds to countries that fail to put their houses in order. Much of the noise can be discounted. Debtor countries have to be seen by their left wings to be standing up to creditors; bankers, too, have constituencies to think of.

Although debtors and creditors wrangle, they need each other. The banks have to arrange for at least part of their interest receipts to come in on time so that serious losses do not appear on their books. And they have to roll over the capital because few of the debtors can currently repay it. The debtors have to keep some sort of creditworthiness to attract new foreign capital. Even if they defaulted on interest payments, most would still be unable to INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE

Uneasy marriages can survive irritation. Rather than search for some magic general solution, debtors and creditors probably have to continue ad hoc arrangements. This should not be beyond their wit, although the marriage would be easier if the richer partners were expanding and importing faster.

The problems of the big debtors can distract attention from worse ones in the Third World. The real problems lie with the very poor, not the less rich. The Brazils of this world are light-years ahead of Africa, which is less indebted simply because it is not sufficiently creditworthy to be able to borrow much.

The world knows Mexico because it stages the World Cop, and Brazil because it wins it. It knows Africa mainly as a desert across which the Paris-Dakar race proceeds in the face of bemused inhabitants. Farther south, the main traffic is to move cattle to where they can survive.

These really poor countries have to rely on what the rich can provide in government aid and on such progress as they can make in exploiting their assets. It would be tragic if the OECD world, distracted by debt quarrels with its middle-income neighbors, forgot these countries. The need is not just for charity but also for political realism. Economic help for the really poor is a race in which the OECD world has a clear edge over the Soviets.

Endless Risk in Beirut

Understandably, American responses to are now captive — the only way to end this hostage-taking in Lebanon are hardening. Civil authority in that shattered country has vanished. Every Westerner still in Beirut surely knows the risks. The State Department keeps urging Americans to clear out, as it did only days before the weekend abduction of four teachers at Beirut University College. By staying on, Americans put themselves and their country at hazard.

What does President Reagan owe these latest pawns in a seemingly endless end game? He can make plain Washington's concern for the safety of any American seized as hostage in a foreign conflict. But what needs to be equally clear is that there will be no secret missions, no ransom offers, no pleas for release of terrorists jailed in Kuwait, no yellow ribbons to hail returning heroes - and please, above all, no more TOW missiles or other weapons for Iran. The White House, chastened, seems finaily to grasp the effects of its diplomatic blunders. There is a limit to what our government can do in a chaotic situation such as that in Lebanon today," says President Reagan. And he now declares that the the pool of hostages grows in Beirut — amount of rage, ransom or yellow ribbons, more than 20 persons from nine countries — THE NEW YORK TIMES.

barbarous practice is to refuse to reward it. That does not preclude contacts with hostage-takers nor a willingness to consider each new case on its own. But the first need is to restore consistency and credibility to something that had become a supply-side hostage policy, all but inviting kidnappings. The Americans who choose to stay in Lebanon have that right. Some are converts to Islam, some have Lebanese spouses, some have occupational ties or are deeply attached to a troubled country. Whatever their reasons, they cannot expect or deserve the sympathy that spontaneously flows to innocent, unwitting and heroic hostages. They are not passengers in a hijacked air-line or Foreign Service officers in a captured embassy. It is not accident or duty that keeps them in Beirut, but their own decision. What the United States owes them most is what it owes all other Americans: pursuing the policy most likely to protect potential hostages from being seized in the first place. What is needed is a steadfast, credible resistance to blackmail.

After the blunders and bluster of recent United States will make no concessions to months, that will not be easy to convey, but terrorist groups, whatever their threats. As it will defeat more terrorists than any

Modest Victory for Kohl

West Germany's government has won re-election safely, but not quite so grandly as it ion party, the Social Democrats, is prepolicy but a discreet acceleration of the search by Chancellor Helmut Kohl's party for a more inspiring figure to succeed him. Mr. Kohl's Christian Democrats remain in power, but their showing was the worst since 1949. They owe their survival in office once again to the small, centrist Free Democratic Party, an ingenious political device invented by an electorate that is deeply reluctant to give any party an absolute majority. West German governments are coalitions - and have been for the past 18 years - between the Free Democrats and one or the other major party. The voters deliberately use this small party as a check on the power of the bigger ones.

The polls had suggested that the Christian Democrats, together with their Bavar-ian affiliate, the Christian Socialists, were headed for a big victory while the Free Democrats might sink out of sight. Apparently a lot of voters responded by switching. In the final count the Christian Democrats ended well below the polls' predictions, while the Free Democrats, having done quite well, will once again hold the key.
It was a notably vacuous campaign, with no inclination on either side to talk serious-had expected. Germans voted for things as they are, but without notable enthusiasm.

The implication is no change in foreign west Germany as in Britain, a conservative government's strength is being greatly angmented by a collapse on the left.

Like the Christian Democrata, the Social Democrats got a smaller share of the vote than in any national election for many years. In their case they lost strength to the Greens, now established as a fourth party calling for environmental protection, pacifism and, in general, a cheerful anarchism. It was essentially the economy that deter-mined this election. Like most of postwar Germany's elections, this one was about stability and economic growth. The economy has been expanding steadily if not rapidly. Inflation last year was negative, mean ing that consumer prices actually fell. Unemployment is high, but even the Social Democrats could not think of anything very plausible to say about it.

There are signs of rougher weather ahead - an unsustainable trade surplus and a soaring exchange rate for the Deutsche mark. But nobody wanted to talk much about disquieting things in this election. In that respect there is much in common between the current practice of politics in the Federal Republic and in the United States. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

Other Comment

Mixed Blessings in Germany

Sunday's elections were not a catastrophe for Helmut Kohl. The chancellor can continue to govern, though under considerably more difficult conditions. But it appears as if Mr. Kohl, who is said to draw his strength from the people, has been inflicted a heavy blow by these very voters. The outcome of the elections offers more burdens than blessings to most of those concerned. As for the Greens, they can no longer be discredited as a disjointed movement fed mainly by undemocratic protesters. They have grown to a size that must be taken into account. And the Social Democratic Party can no longer ignore demands from its rank-andfile to clarify its relationship to the Greens. [The party leader] Johannes Rau's strategy failed to stop the Green offshoot that has grown from Social Democratic wood and has developed into an independent plant. His strategy now has expired, along with his candidacy for the chancellorship.

OPINION

Either Regan Goes or Things Get Worse

WASHINGTON — President Reagan gave his version on Tuesday of the state of the union. In the process he allowed viewers their inion. In the process he allowed viewers their first extended look at him in more than two months, and let them judge for themselves the physical and emotional state of the president. But what of the state of the presidency and the Reagan administration as the fourth and final quarter of his tenure begins?

To gauge that, you must look beyond the president and his rhetoric into the White House and the cabinet, and the picture is not reason this is an administration at odds with itself, one more likely to fly apart from internal dissen-sion than because of domestic political opposi-tion. It is an administration poorly prepared to exploit its remaining opportunities and danger-ously vulnerable to foreign mischief-making.

This scary judgment — not expressed lightly — reflects no loss of confidence in the president by the men running the executive branch. It reflects the increasing irreversible and unneces-sary tensions resulting from his stubborn insistence on keeping at the center of his government his fatally flawed chief of staff, Donald Regan.

Because this is a delegated presidency, and because Mr. Regan has insisted that he be the main channel through whom others deal with the president, the loss of confidence in him by his principal associates is a weakness from which the tration cannot recover. It will not get better as long as he is there; it can only get worse.

The latest, but surely not the last, chapter in the unraveling saga was the revelation last week by The Washington Post that Mr. Regan had misled Secretary of State George Shultz last May about the secret sale of American arms to Iran. When Mr. Shultz confronted Mr. Regan during the economic summit in Tokyo about rumors of such sales that the U.S. ambassador in London had reported, Mr. Regan reportedly said that it "couldn't be true or shouldn't be true."

had overridden objections from Mr. Smiltz and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and se-cretly approved, with Mr. Regan watching, a directive allowing such sales. It was three months after the first missiles were delivered to Tehran. According to unchallenged accounts of Mr. Shultz's testimony to the House Foreign Affairs Committee last week, Mr. Regan led Mr. Shultz to believe that he shared Mr. Shultz's concern about the effect of such sales on the credibility of America's anti-terrorism policy. Mr. Regan said he would raise the issue with the president. When Mr. Shuitz's testimony was revealed by the Post last week, Mr. Regan said through a spokesman that he had no recollection of the conversations with Mr. Shultz but would not dispute Mr. Shultz's account.

That evasion is supposed to satisfy everyone. It does not. The reality is that George Shultz, the president's chief spokesman and representative to foreign nations, has been revealed to the world as a man of so little seeming consequence that the White House chief of staff feels free to deceive him on a matter of major importance.

Mr. Shultz cannot remain in his post for long unless the president acts decisively to repair this impossible situation. Mr. Reagan has to show Don Regan the door or risk losing Mr. Shultz. If he makes the opposite choice—letting Mr.
Shultz go and retaining the chief of staff whose fingerprints are all over the Iran fiasco—conversations I have had lead me to believe that Mr. Shultz will not be the only cabinet figure to quit.

Mir. Simitz is, among other things, a central figure in what might be called "the Republican wing" of the cabinet, as distinguished from the "Reaganite wing." Those are the men who had an active leadership role in the Republican Party and/or other Republican administrations before 1980. They brought their talents to the Rengan administration out of admiration for the president and the belief that his leadership would dent and the belief that his leadership would enhance public support for the kind of policies that their party had long espoused. They will not let Don Regan drag their party to ruin.

The men in this circle include Mr. Weinberger, Treasury Secretary James Baker, Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, Labor Secretary Bill Brock and, of course, Vice President George Bush. Mr. Bush will not — cannot — resign. But I would not guarantee any of the others staying to the end, if the president decides to choose his proud chief of staff, who has been boasting that proud chief of staff, who has been beasting that he has come out of the shambles of Iran with enhanced power, over his secretary of state.

It is an open secret in Washington that the cabinet members I have mentioned see a need for President Reagan to be far bolder than he has been in breaking the impasse on budget deficits and U.S.-Soviet relations. To do that, he simply must get the Iran fiasco behind him and those responsible for it out of his administration. Othresponsible for it out of his authinistration. Otherwise the voters will likely turn to the Democrats in 1988. And these men are not about to stand by passively while the future of the Republican Party is sacrificed to the ego of a blundering and dissembling chief of staff.

Forging a Closer Relationship With Eastern Europe

By Milan Svec

WASHINGTON — A strong case can now be made for reinvigorating U.S. relations with Eastern Europe. The region is at a critical juncture, and the Reagan administraproject a more tolerant image. Such reluctance would send a very discourtion has made a timely appointment in giving a high-level official, Deputy Secretary of State John Whitehead, aging signal to East Europeans — particularly the younger generation, which is profoundly influenced and fascinated by American culture.

special responsibility for policy there.

His visit last fall to Hungary, Romania and Yugoslavia and his forthcoming trip to Poland, with possible stops in Czechoslovakia and Bulgaria, are evidence that the administraia, are evidence that the administra-tion is addressing this question seri-ously. It kindles hope that Washing-critical of the Soviet Union and positon may inject some life into a vagne and largely reactive policy.

The principle behind U.S. policy toward Eastern Europe has for years been "differentiation" - in effect, a promise to reward those governme that show greater tolerance, flexibili-ty and independence from Moscow. This is the right idea, but it must be pursued more determinedly. Washagton must look more closely at the East European countries and make a more concerted effort to engage those showing the most flexibility.

The ascension of Mikhail Gorbachev makes a reinvigorated U.S. approach more important now than at any time in years. Moscow's search for reforms and its assertiveness in economic relations with its allies have compounded the mounting economic pressures on Eastern Europe.

The Soviet Communist Party is speaking through Pravda about need-ed changes in its neighbors' ineffi-cient economies, but the East Europeans are not sure how to proceed. Reformers are seeking new opportu-nities, but conservatives in some countries would prefer firm guidelines that would enable them to con-

time to "govern" but ensure that

Moscow took ultimate responsibility. There has been pressure from Moscow for cooperation among the countries of the region. Yet, in their efforts to undertake reform, many have come to rely increasingly on what the Hungarian leader Janos Kadar calls "their traditions and their own peculiarities." The result is a contradictory maze - economic uncertainty and, in several cases, new doubts about the authorities. This produces

Consider one example, in Czecho-siovakia, where Pravda's new ap-proach has baffled readers both in and out of government. When a re-cent issue of the Soviet newspaper reached newsstands several days late, the Czechoslovak Communist Party daily, Rude Pravo, felt called upon to explain to a suspicious population that the delay was not due to foul play by the Prague government.

It was just as unheard of for Czechoslovaks to look for Pravda voluntarily as for them to suspect that their government might have wanted to prevent them from reading it. Needless to say, this sort of confum provides a considerable opportunity for the United States.

Nor is that the only reason why

Washington should be taking more initiative in Eastern Europe. For all his innovative tactics and effective public relations, Mr. Gorbachev has largely failed to weaken the unity of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, but he will undoubtedly continue to try. For Washington, the best defense is surely a good offense. A supple U.S. policy in Eastern Europe could help to check Mr. Gorbachev's ambitious hopes for dividing Westem Europe, or at least raise the cost of such efforts by forcing him to allow his East European allies more political and economic leeway.

If, on the other hand, the United States does not engage itself more actively in Eastern Europe, it could diminish the room for manauver created there by the Kremlin's efforts to

What is needed is simply a more subtle and responsive attitude in Washington — a willingness, above all, to encourage the growing diversi-fication of the most dynamic counuries in the region. ## Charter 77, Heartened by Reform Talk From Moscow, Fights On slovakia there have been new arrests: seven members of the Jazz Section, a cultural group with many followers, were detained last month. The persecution of dissenters continues unabated.

Unlike their government, members of the Charter 77 numan rights movement have been heartened by Mikhail Gorbachev's talk of reform. Charter 77 originated 10 years ago this month with 242 signatures on its manifesto urging greater rights. The list has grown to more than 1,300, though the Prague government has done its best to prevent these people from leading normal lives. Long prison terms, frequent detentions and continu police surveillance have been used to punish chartists. But

T HE Czechoslovak regime seems impervious to the appeals for more openness and democracy that have been emanating from Moscow. Political prisoners are being released in the Soviet Union and in Poland, but in Czechoslovakia there have been new arrests; seven memed, their driver's licenses revoked, their car tires slashed and their foreign guests threatened by police.

Yet, in 10 years the chartists have issued some 350 statements on subjects as diverse as health care, religion, the peace movement and education. The movement vigorously encourages the lively, independent underground culture in Czechoslovakia. If greater freedom eventually comes to Czechoslovakia, it should be credited less to external forces than to the in domitable spirit of the charterists, who have preserved for Czechoslovalda its conscience and its ideals.

Such operations would not be easy. They never are. But why last the United States raised, organized and trained the Delta Force if not for just such an emergency?

Talking to people in Washington one gets the uneasy feeling that, in-mersed in bureaucratic detail, they do not realize how high the stakes are in the Middle East. The Islamic fanatics are not just kidnapping American, they are telling America's friends in that region and in Europe dust the United States is powerless to do anything about it. To date, with the exception of the bombing in Libys, they have the facts on their side.

Successful intervention again these thugs might deter them for further acts of terrorism. It is a sa assumption that they have planned something to disrupt the Islam meeting in Kuwait. And if West Ger many hands over the accused hijack-United States, as it should, it will be in for some rough times. It must also be kept in mind that any military action in the Middle East might have some effect on the war between Iran and Iraq. Again, there is too little understanding of the consequences of an Iranian victory to an unstable region. Every govern-ment from Egypt's around to Oman's would have to be on its guard against Shiite uprisings fomented and fi-nanced by a triumphant Iran.

Meanwhile, analysis of that war needs to consider the effect on the Iranian people's morale of continued Iraqi bombing Isfahan, I am reliably informed, is being bombed three or four times a day from unidnight to early morning by Iraqi formations. ## Chemical Arms: U.S. Restraint Was Not Infectious

OSLO — If you want evidence that the Soviet Union does not imitate voluntary restraint by the United States, you need only to examine the case of chemical weapons. In 1969, the Nixou adminis stopped the production of chemical strms. In ensuing years, the U.S. Army Chemical Corps dwindled until it almost disappeared. Meanwhile, the Soviet chemical effort continued. Though there is disagreement about the size of the Soviet chemical weapons stockpile, it is certainly substantial. A range of Soviet weapons systems can deliver chemical weapons. Production plants and storage depots are scattered about the Soviet Union. The Pentagon estimates that 45,000 officers and enlisted men are involved with chemical weapons in

The U.S. chemical stockpile, which is also substantial, has been aging. The Pentagon says that only about 10 percent of it is usable. Critics of chemical weapons call this an exaggeration, designed to justify produc-tion of new chemical weapons.

What caught the attention of NATO military officials was the 1973 Arab-Israeli war. Soviet tanks cap-tured by Israel had air filtering devices that would allow operation in a chemical environment (or, critics note, in a nuclear environment). The U.S. Army proposed the production of binary chemical weapons in 1973. These weapons employ two relatively harmless chemicals, which combine only after firing to produce a toxic chemical agent. The Pentagon has plans to use them with artillery, aircraft bombs and rockets.

The Reagan administration took up this proposal in 1982, but it ran into opposition in Congress. At Congress's request. President Reagan ap-pointed a special commission headed by Walter Stoessel, the former ambassador to Moscow. The commission questioned the quality of U.S. intelligence on Soviet chemical arms. But it supported the production of By John C. Ausland

This is the second of two articles.

The panel also advocated chemical weapons that could bit targets well behind the front lines without exposing aircraft pilots to anti-aircraft fire. The Soviets already have missiles that can use chemical warheads.

European governments were cool to the proposal for binary weapons. Having just survived a debate about basing U.S. miclear missiles in Europe, they had no desire for another ebate about chemical weapons.
The opponents of chemical weapons in the U.S. Congress tried to take advantage of European feelings. Unable to muster the votes to kill the able to master the votes to kill the binary program, they added a provision that required NATO approval. This led to some fancy footwork by the Pentagon and the State Department. Rather than seeking approval from the political organs of NATO, they used less visible military channels. The critics of NATO in Western Figures works up less in the cares. Europe woke up late in the game. With some smaller countries register-ing objections, the defense ministery endorsed binary weapons last spring After another struggle, Congress narrowly approved production of bi-nary artillery shells, provided there were no agreement to abolish chemical weapons by the fall of 1987. It held off, however, on the Bigeye binary aircraft bomb because of questions about its performance

Congress stipulated that the Penta-gon establish a program for the destruction of existing chemical stocks by 1994. This will be an exormous undertaking, costing more than $2 billion. In the process, stocks now in West Germany will be removed.

The new binary weapons will be stored in the United States. The decision to do so has produced less discussion than it warrants. It is conve-nient for the Kohl government, since hinary weapons, saying that the exist-ing stocks were largely useless and were hazardous to handle.

it pulls the teeth of German opposi-tion to modernization of the U.S. chemical stockpile. But one must wonder why the United States should produce weapons for the defense of Europe when European governments are not prepared to cope with domestic opposition to these wespons. General Bernard Rogers, the NATO supreme allied commander, says he is satisfied with this arrange-ment. He believes that binary chemical weapons in the United States are a better deterrent than the aging chemical weapons now in Enrope. This is, however, simply making the best of what is politically possible.

The question now is what a Demo-cratic U.S. Congress will do about the binary program. In the past, deci-sions have been made by margins as narrow as one vote. Critics of the program doubt that Congress will reverse the decision to produce binary artillery shells. So they will concen-trate their fire on the Bigeye aircraft bomb and other chemical systems. Given the disorder in Washington and the lack of political courage in Western Europe, it is not possible to develop a sufficiently cohesive Western position to negotiate an agree-ment with Moscow limiting the proliferation of chemical weapons.

Such a position would require the Soviets to agree to reliable verification arrangements or confront a cred-ible NATO chemical weapons capa-bility. It would require greatly improved Western defenses and the storage of a variety of chemical weapons in Western Europe. As it is, the prospect is for negotia tions in Geneva to limp along, with agreement always just over the horizon. Meanwhile, the size and number of chemical weapons arsenals in the world will continue to grow. International Herald Tribune

gress for a German-American opera alliance. An emissary of the Kaiser's Royal Opera, Herr Winter, has gone to New York with a view to entering into a working arrangement with the Metropolitan Opera House. It is understood that the object is to effect a scheme whereby the "stars" of New York will be "lent" to Berlin from time to time, and vice versa. To reduce the salaries now commanded by the Carusos and Destinas is also one of the purposes. The Kaiser's Opera is particularly interested in this feature, for American dollars have tempted many of the great art-ists of Berlin across the ocean. It has been stated in the Prussian Diet that the Emperor's activities as "angel" for music and the drama cost him

1937: Transient Empire LONDON - The belief that "white domination" over the world had reached its highwater mark was ex-pressed by Colonel Theodore Rooseveit in the first lecture of a series on colonial problems at London University [on Jan. 27]. In 1910 his father set the Foreign Offices buzzing by a lecture at the same university when he uttered his "calculated indiscretion" to the British concerning Egypt, "Govern or get out." While the yourger Roosevelt had no indiscretions on tap, he said, "History shows that it is impossible for nations to maintain control over and administer a large alien population indefinitely. Sconer or later ... the home country either changes its policies or becomes weak. and its colony again becomes inde-pendent. That is bound to be the case unless some new formula is found."

This is how the D-YWHF Cycle works: In 1949, Harry Truman began to permit the series of ethically blind predations by his cronies that led to "the mess in Washington" and the collapse of his poll ratings. A dozen years later, John Kennedy, eschewing air cover, went along with the scheme to over-throw Fidel Castro at the Bay of Figs.

A dozen years after that, Richard Nixon enmeshed himself in the cover-up that capped Watergate; and 12 years

In 1946-48, the Communists overthrew the Kuomintang; 10 years later Mao clobbered the economy with his Great Leap Forward; in 1966, Maoists hot to purge the revolution of its capital-istic elements brought on the Cultural Revolution; in 1976, when Mao died, his Gang of Four was ousted by the same growd thrown out a decade before.

Now, 10 years and a few months later (the T-YCDT Cycle works better on a Chinese calendar), the man who led the fight against the Maoist Gang of Four is himself tottering. Deng Xiaoping 82 and no longer universally described as "feisty," has had to throw his chosen successor, Hu Yaobang, to the wolves. But who are the wolves in the Year of the Rabbit? Were more student protesters and intellectuals able to bring on the vellow Perils of Pauline? Or will the aftershock be more severe - and then will Mr. Deng and his capitalist-road philosophy be able to survive the tumult predicted by the Dong Tang cycle?

Student unrest is not Mr. Deng's

WASHINGTON —A Chinese pundist, examining American political down his likely successor — by fears down his tikely successor — by fears of more powerful factions.

Reacting against his rule is the generation that he defeated 10 years ago: all the Red Guards and their Maoist friends who rampaged at will to enforce revolutionary equality, joined by all the people who resent the progress that others have made under the "unfair" inequalities of market economies.

We hear that crowd referred to now as "conservatives," opposing Mr. Deng's economic reforms, but they are really the radical activists who have been driven down, along with the millions of peasants and workers who have not fared as well in the free-ish enterprise as their more industrious neighbors. Add to that some Red Army generals angry at the dominance of their officer corps by the bureaucrass, and you have the der for the T-YCDT Cycle.

Those old radicals do not want what the students and some intellectuals want; democracy is not what is stirring in China. On the contrary, the yearning for freedom of a few brave souls is seen by the radicals as proof that Mr. Deng has sold out the revolution.

Mr. Deng, beating a retreat, is castigating the protesters, serving up Mr. Hu's political head on a platter, pretending he has been against the loosening of central political authority all along, as if to show the radicals China need not fear the onset of real democracy and individual freedom from him or his successors.

But Mr. Deng now has as little to say about who will run China in a few years as Ronald Reagan has to say about who will run the United States. Our system will not change with the change of faces; modern China's has.

Why is Mr. Deng failing? For the same reason that General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev, reforming his sys-tem even more slowly, will fail in the Soviet Union: You cannot fix communism's inherent economic stagnation by adopting a little bit of capitalism.

A free market works well with free people; it cannot work well with unfree people. Marx was right about the link between politics and economics, but to stop economic "exploitation" of workers by investors, he substituted political exploitation of workers by party members. That system has failed in the Soviet Union and in China.

Because communism's leaders cannot find an incentive as effective as the pursuit of self-interest in a free society, they try semifreedom. But no place is as dangerous as halfway. China must move, quickly, forward or back — and Mr. Deng's weakness, plus the cyclical chart, suggests bad news ahead.

Russia's Babushkas Got the Forecast Right

MOSCOW — My wife was worried.

I had got home late from the office, partly because it was so cold that it took a long time to start the car, and also because the drive home was treacherous and slow. "The hot water has been off for three hours, and now the heating pipes are cold," she said.

The flat was cooling fast. I kept my coat on as I checked with neighbors that their heating had also gone off. I rang the Russian caretaker, who said that the emergency services were working on it. What about our children? Keep them in bed, well wrapped up, and put their fur hats ou, was his advice.

Outside it had just hit minus 40 degrees centigrade (minus 40 Fahrenheit). That is very cold indeed. In our allelectric flat we could not even turn the gas taps on. I remembered what Russian friends had said about the last big freeze when whole blocks of flats were evacuated. But then there was a groaning in the pipes and the warmth began to return. I Felt like cheering.

Normally I relish the approach of a Moscow winter. I have taken up crosscountry skiing here, and have learned to love the Russian landscape under spow, that astonishing radiance of the winter sun filtered through the bare birch trees, the taste of cold vodka after a long run, the sweet pain of warming at a picnic fire deep in the forest.

This year it has not been like that. We had snow in September which lasted for two days and then gave way to an Indian In November and December we had snow that melted in sudden thaws. It was wet, cold and nasty.

The babushkas, the all-powerful and all-knowing Russian grannies who really

By Martin Walker

run the country, began to prophesy last summer that this winter would be the coldest and most fearsome for years.

The squirrels began collecting their nuts early and in unheard-of quantities, they said. The red berries in the forests were two and three times more plentiful than usual, an infallible sign that Mother Nature was preparing winter food stocks for the poor birds. Certain kinds of mushrooms were thick on the ground this autumn, they said. I forget what it was the pine cones were said to be doing, but it was another reliable sign that this winter was going to be a real stinker.

Forty degrees centigrade below, the babushkas cackled. They poked me hard in the chest and said. "Don't let me see you or your children going around without a good fur hat, young man."

Forty degrees below freezing. I last came across that kind of temperature when I was in central Siberia, about a thousand miles north of Lake Baikal. And there I heard the mystical, marvelous sound that the Russians call the "whisper of the stars." It is the rustling and crackling noise your breath makes as you exhale and the water vapor instantly freezes into ice crystals and falls tinkling to the ground.

Siberians are quite mad when it comes to winter. Having listened to the whispering of the stars, I was ready to get back in the jeep and cower around the heater. My host insisted on a picnic.

I was put in charge of the spirit, a Siberian super-vodka that is as near pure alcohol as makes no difference. In my view, it is spirit that explains the success of the Soviet space program.

Rocket fuel cannot compete.
I nursed the spirit while my hosts built a fire, piled snow into the cauldron and began to whittle flakes of deep-frozen fish into what became a delicious stew. Some salt, some potatoes and dried herbs, a few slugs of spirit and we became a very merry party.

Then it came time to take a pec. I trudged through the snow to a discreet distance and began a long process of unbuttoning layers of garments. Finally all was ready and I watched in disbelief as a thin but sturdy stalagmite of quickfrozen urine ascended toward me.

At moments like this your entire past life tends to flash before you - or at least those bits where knowledgeable people told you about frostbite, what it did to the affected part, and whether the damage was reversible. At this point memory failed me and panic ensued.

I began to flounder slowly backward, away from this growing pillar of ice. It followed with obvious menace. I retreated further, tripped and fell, just as Sibe-ria's rival to the learning tower of Pisa collapsed onto the snow and lay there in the shape of a large question mark.

Understandably shaken by this experience, I hurried back to the campfire, where my friends had become so hysterical with langhter that one of them fell over and knocked down the last bottle of spirit, which probably was just as well.

The Numbers in Taiwan

We agree with the general tone and the broad conclusions of the opinion column by Harvey J. Feldman on political developments in Taiwan ("Taipei Inches Along Road to Democracy," Dec.

No 'Aid' for Africa

I agree about the need for increased assistance to Africa (Other Comment, Jun. 22), but a change of attitude is needed in the West. Developed countries help themselves by helping Africa. since Africa is potentially a big market. The term "aid" suggests charity. Assistance to Africa should instead be regarded as a long-term investment.

In general, the best way to keep an economy healthy is to regard the whole world as one unit. Forget national boundaries, develop long-term policies and learn to be patient.

Pardons Here and There

In "The Pardon as an Index of Tyranny" (Jan. 10), Charles Krauthammer overlooks President Gerald Ford's pardon of a high-ranking Watergate official as an example of his theory. It misfits his free-country criterion.

Acquittal of Lambsdorff Asked on Gravest Charge

BONN - The prosecution recded the acquittal Tuesday of the former West German economics minister, Otto Lambsdorff, on charges of corruption.

Dieter Irsfeld, the state prosecutor, said in Boan District Court that Mr. Lambsdorff, Hans Friderichs, Mr. Lambsdorff's predecessor as economics minister, and Eberhard von Branchitsch, a former general manager for the Flick holding company, all should be cleared of the corruption charges.

Mr. Irsfeld said the prosecution would seek convictions of the three on the lesser charge of tax evasion on political party donations. The judge is due to announce a verdict in the 17-month trial on Feb. 16.

Speculation about a return of Mr. Lambsdorff to the cabinet, possibly with his former portfolio, has mounted since Sunday's general election, in which his Free Democratic Party increased its strength in Chancellor Helmut Kohl's center-right coalition government.

For years, officials promised that the shuttle eventually would be able to pay for itself by carrying commercial cargo into space. ## Charles Darwin theorized that survival depends on the ability to change.

We're living proof.

In 4859, Charles Darwin outlined his theories on evolution in The Origin of Species, Simply stated, Darwin believed that organisms must be able to respond to their constantly-changing environment in order to be successful

For 70 years, Mitsubishi has been proving the validity of Darwin's theories as they apply to building the products required by our automotive society. Our species originated with the 1917 Mitsubishi Model-A, Japan's first series-production motorcar. It became the progenitor of all the Japanese automobiles that followed.

Over a half century ago, Mitsubishi developed Japan's first 4 x 4 vehicle, the PX-33, with the country's unpowed road conditions in mind. The following 50-plus years have seen the Mitsublshi species progress through various phases of evolution, all the while demonstrating the ability to adapt to changing social, economic and geographical environments.

During the years we were shaping Japan's 4X4 history, we challenged virtually every environment where a 4x4 vehicle must go. Through sand and marshland and snow. Over icy and rain-swept roads, gravel and paved roads. And trailblazing where there were no roads at all.

Proof that heredity is nothing but accumulated experience gained through adapting to the environment, Mitsubishi today has a range of 4x4 vehicles able to meet every automotive need on earth. From 550cc 4x4 superminicars to mammath 16,000cc all-wheel-drive special-purpose offhighway trucks. Good reasons why more and more people drive 4x4 vehicles with the Three Diamonds marque.

One prime example of the theory that survival depends on the ability to change is the Mitsubishi Pajero, Montero 4x4. Engineered with our halfcentury of four-wheel-drive expertise, it's become a rally winner on three confinents by not only surviving but thriving in environmental conditions that few others can withstand.

Besides solids, he also showed irridescent pastels and giant-sized polka Both Karl Lagerfeld for Chanel dots. The pajamas at the end were topped by long, floating coats and nothing underneath - a naughty, naughty thing the Ungaro of past seasons would never have dared

At Chanel, the program now talks of "neo-Chanel" suits which, as Lagerfeld put it before the show. "are no longer classic." Everything has been changed and turned around, he added, pointing out that the proportions were different, with rounded jackets closing asymetrically. The famous Chanel cuffs were switched around so that the buttons are now underneath.

Cropped boleros or long cardigans replaced the regular Chanel jacket. As for hats, many of which were big, feathered concoctions in-spired by Marie Antoinette, they were the maddest in Paris, and a far cry from the famous Chanel boater. There were still some Chanel echoes in the use of fabrics (soft tweeds and jerseys), the colorings (beige and tricolors), and in the braiding edging most of the suits. The came lias were familiar too.

Pretty, high-waisted dresses glided over the body, erasing all curves. Lagerfeld said he had to anchor them on a tight corset. Many of these dresses were black on black. with black chiffon outlined with black satin. The cage dress was another favorite, with the body seen through a transparent outer chiffon layer. ## A Too-Relaxed 'Holiday'

By Robert Cushman

ONDON - As a devotee of American comedy I would like to believe that Philip Barry's 1928 piece "Holiday" is a funnier play than it seems to be in its revival at

It is the kind of piece in which a rich father calls his daughter 'Daughter" as a guarantee of style: his own style, that is, and by exten-sion the play's as well. Daddy in this case is a very rich New Yorker whose beautiful girl gets herself engaged to a young man of obscure origin but excellent business prospects. But though he can make money, he cares about other things, which renders him extremely suspect to the family he is about to marry into. The only one who un-derstands him is his prospective sister-in-law, an ugly duckling who has been chafing against the family bonds for years.

It takes Barry three leasurely acts to bring this obviously-matched couple together, and at that he postpones the clinch until after the final curtain. That relaxation could have all the qualities that plays about the talkative well-heeled aspire to. Relaxation, though, is one thing, inertia another, and Lindsay Anderson's production is appall-ingly slothful. It is also, except per-haps for box-office purposes, bizarrely cast. Having a real married couple playing your hero and hero-ine is traditionally intriguing, but Malcolm McDowell and Mary Steenburgen strike no sparks from the text or from each other.

McDowell, in a role made famous on film by Cary Grant, gets only as far down the Hollywood mtic line as Douglas Fairbanks Jr. He has gone silvery on top and seems kind. He has stage confidence, but no stage presence. The opposite is true of Steenburgen, who worries away at her lines

The title derives from the hero's wish to take a couple of years off from the rat race and enjoy himself, a mild enough ambition but Manscandalized. Barry strikes his deepest notes in the character of an alcoholic heir who also wants to escape but has been terrorized by family tradition Frank Grimes gives him an electrically shaky performance. Cherie Lunghi as the rejected rich bitch is not only the prettiest person on stage, which is called for, but the most attractive, which isn't. That she unbalances the play is hardly her fault.

Nobody unbalances "Three Men on a Horse" at the National Theatre, not even Gemma Craven as a Broadway showgirl turned gambler's moll. Actually her cartoon performance is heroically restrained compared with some of her recent work at the National, and it comes off in a high-kicking bit that enables her to burlesque her own distinguished career in musicals. The trio of small-time hoods with whom she is involved may make you realize all over again how good is the book of "Guys and Dolls." In comparison the dialogue of this 1935 work by John Cecil Holm (the late) and George Abbott (100 this year) is not especially fla-vorful. But Abbott has always known how to take care of business, and by the end the Runyonesque proceedings are handing out very big laughs indeed. Jonathan Lynn's production This isn't what Corneille wrote: obeys the first law of farce, often preached but rarely practiced: its characters take themselves very sein a piping twang, standing with riously. Geoffrey Hutchings, in-legs akimbo in a strange black deed, is positively devout in his account of a greetings-card versilier, squeaky-voiced and squeaky-clean, who has an infallible gift for picking the winning nag in any race. He never bets himself: that hattan's big money people are would spoil things, and besides he can't afford it (This is a play that knows there's a depression on). But he encounters three professional gamblers, and endows them for a time with undreamed-of success. their leader is played by Ken Stott with a marvelously detailed blend of delicacy and brutality. He is the National's best recent find.

Apart from its incidental music, which is cool '50s jazz, the production is right in period but never trades on it. It even eschews the besetting clicke of vintage comedy revivals, the all-dancing curtain-call. (There is a particularly grue-some example in "Holiday"). The play itself dances, right through to an ending that balances perfectly between wish-fulfillment and rude

The first great French classical tragedy, Corneille's "The Cid" (1636), is, strangely enough, a comedy. At least its hero and heroine end up alive, and even with some hope of being united. It is a heroic comedy: that is to say, its characters live - and manage, for the most part, not to die - by strict codes of love, humor and revenge. To us they may seem absurd. The achievement of Declan Donnellan's production for his Cheek by Jowl company at the Warehouse is to accept and capitalize on this. The king of Spain (the splendidly quizzical Hugh Ross) has doubts about the codes, and he becomes the production's spokesm production satirizes. But the satire is never gross or crude; it implies the original values even if it cannot embody them. There seems to be another, more bombastic play going on in the wings of this moderndress Ruritanian one. This is quite a balancing act, and the players would have to be more experienced to bring it off completely. They do so bravely, though. Aden Gillet is the Cid, a youthfully invincible warrior who kills his beloved's father, thereby condemning her to four acts of agonizingly mixed emotions. These are played with wit, and occasionally with searing immediacy, by Patricia Kerrigan, who seems to be wearing the same black dress as Mary Steenburgen. On her it looks good.

INTERNATIONAL MANAGER

Personal Liability Insurance Popular in a High-Risk Age

By SHERRY BUCHANAN

ONDON — More managers are running for cover at greater cost. Confronted by tougher laws on insider trading and insolvency, an increase in mergers and takeover bids and the subsequent threat of shareholder suits, directors and company officers are taking out insurance to cover legal costs and company criteris are training and damages.

Most of the major underwriters in London, including Lloyd's of London and American International Underwriters, offer managers personal liability insurance plans.

"The legal chimate is such that directors ought to be able to the companies to enable them to do their job properly," said insure themselves to enable them to do their job properly," said

"If you have been a

which directors can take out insurance individually. Most other brokers offer a blanket plan for a full board; according to American International Underwriters, the average cost is £10,000

The Institute of Directors introduced its plan 15 months ago after deciding that the Insolvency Act of 1986, which aims at punishing blatantly dishonest directors, was too tough on honest A dies was seen and ones and could dissuade them from serving as directors. So far 120 members have subscribed to the plan.

It is clear, however, that directors and officers cannot insure themselves against criminal penalties.

"If you have been a naughty boy you have to carry the can," said Nick Stanbury, a commercial liability executive with Directors & Officers Ltd., which is part of Legal Protection Group Ltd. The group's plan insures corporate boards for up to £1 million a "Criminal penalties cannot be indemnified under any insur-ance policy," Mr. Stanbury continued. "It is void as being against public policy."

UT THE Directors & Officers plan does cover claims for damages "which flow from court action which suggests fraud or wrongful action if the director is not found guilty of fraud," according to Mr. Stanbury.

The plan also covers lawyers' costs during an official inquiry or an investigation by the Department of Trade and Industry (such as the one being carried out now in the Guinness affair) or the London Stock Exchange.

One gray area is whether personal liability insurance policies cover legal fees when directors are found guilty of a criminal

The difficulty for the underwriter is in judging beforehand whether a board has a reasonable defense. If the underwriter does decide that a board has a reasonable defense, it may cover part of the legal fees. If directors are then proven guilty of fraud, it is debatable whether the underwriter can recover the money it has

As corporate boards seek insurance coverage, premiums in the London market are increasing.

"The premiums are steadily going up in Britain because of the news on insider dealing and the awareness of what is going on in the United States," said Malcolm Nightingale, an underwriter with American International Underwriters in London.

"Premium rates have tended to go up partly as a result of international exposure," said Mr. Stanbury of Directors & Officers. He noted that premiums were particularly high for British companies with large U.S. subsidiaries and exposure in the U.S. market.

"It is rare to review directors' and officers' personal liability policies without asking for an increase," he said. "Depending on See INSURANCE, Page 13

Pickens Sets Sights Farther Afield Mesa's Transfer Opens Door for Non-Energy Takeovers

A Tally of Pickens Profits

By Thomas C. Hayes New York Times Service AMARILLO, Texas - T. Boone Pickens is not saying much about it, but when the last remnants of his Mesa Petroleum Co. are transferred in early Febmary to its successor, Mesa Limited Partners, the Texas oilman will be free to pursue corporate takeovers outside the energy

In Wall Street's view, Mr. Pickens proved his financial prowess in Mesa's raids against Gulf Oil Corp., Phillips Petroleum Co. and Unocal Corp. in 1984 and 1985. He has generated more than $400 million in aftertax profits for his independent oil company since 1981 with those takeover campaigns and other investments. Some of Mr. Pickens's former associates and some Wall Street analysts say privately that he has billion or more from investors to finance takeovers outside the oil industry, That sum, in theory, is enough to buy majority control of any but a handful of the largest American corporations.

For now, Mr. Pickens is keeping his own counsel. "People have all these images," he said during an interview in his Ama-

Japan to Extend Quotas on Auto Exports to U.S.

New York Times Service TOKYO - in an effort to head off growing protectionist sentiment in the United States, Japan an-nounced Tuesday that it would continue its voluntary restraints on automobile exports to the United States for a seventh year.

Hagime Tamura, the minister of international trade and industry, said the quota for automobile ex-ports would be 2.3 million cars, the same level as in the previous two vears. He said the ministry believed that without the restraints, automobile exports to the United States would have increased and exacerhated trade frictions.

Automobile exports accounted for more than one-third of Japan's trade surplus with the United States last year, $16.8 billion of a total $43.3 billion in the fiscal year running from April 1985 to March 1986, according to the ministry. Some U.S. automakers and the United Auto Workers union, citing the current $51.5 billion trade deficit with Japan, had called for a reduction in the number of cars shipped to the United States.

The proposal triggered a heated debate within the Japanese government, according to press reports. Some officials argued that a cut in automobile exports would be a dramatic gesture that might avert fur-ther trade friction, while others argued that to do so would hurt the automobile industry, already suffering from a strong yen, and in-

Mr. Tamura said that a reduction in shipments had been considered, but rejected.

"Japan is neither a subject coun-try nor a colony of the United States," he said, "Considering that the Japanese economy is in a recession because of the strong yen and foreign cars are entering Japan, I am sure that the United States Congress and the United States auto industry will welcome this de-

Japan's Output Lower for First Time in 11 Years

TOKYO - Japanese industrial output last year fell for the first time in 11 years, the Ministry of International Trade and Industry said Tuesday. It said output at the nation's factories and mines in 1986 fell 0.4 percent. Production of electrical and precision machiners increased, but output of general machinery, steel and transportation equipment slowed, a ministry official said. Japanese businessmen were particularly concerned over the yen's growing strength, which slowed exports, the official said. The ministry does not have a forecast for calendar 1987, but has projected that industrial output in the financial year beginning April will grow 2.2 per-cent, the official said, Production for the current financial year is expected to decline 0.3 percent, he said.

nouncement shows the govern ment's desire to act quickly to put a difficult issue behind it. Two years ago, the announcement that Japan would allow auto exports to the United States to grow by 24.3 per-cent touched off what may have been the most severe trade crisis between the two nations since World War 11.

The early decision also reflected a broad agreement among Japa-nese automakers that continuing nese automakers that continuing restraints were not only inevitable but, in some ways, desirable.

Even before the official decision was made, a number of leading Japanese automobile executives said they thought it would be im-possible to end the auto restraints this year, given the large U.S. trade deficit with Japan and a Democratic majority in Congress resolved to China International Trust & Investment Corp. will acquire 362 million shares of Cathay under an agreement reached with Swire Pacific Ltd., which owns 53 percent of the airline's shares, and Hongkong & Shanghai Benking Corp., which owns 23 percent, Swire said.

Cathay shares closed Friday at 5.60 dollars in Hong Kong trading and Swire closed at 19.20 dollars. Both Swire and Cathay voluntarily suspended trading Monday amid rumors of the Chinese purchase.

Iberia Air to Report Profit For '86, First in a Decade

MADRID — Spain's government-owned Iberia Air Lines will announce a small profit for 1986, the carrier's first in 10 years, the company chairman, Narcis Andreu, says.

"We expect to be slightly over the break-even point after the previous year's 9.13 billion peseta [about $70 million] loss," he said. He said improved operations led to a cash flow of 19 billion pesetas last year, compared with a cumulative negative cash flow of 9 billion peseta from 1981 to 1985.

"Some external factors like the drop in aviation fuel prices helped put us in the black," Mr. Andreu continued. "We also achieved better results with a more rational adjustment of supply and demand."

He noted, for example, that Iberia reduced flights to the United States when U.S. tourism dropped last summer and added flights to Latin America. "Thanks to this cutback and the use of smaller aircraft we operated at 88 percent capacity on U.S. routes last August. The route to Tokyo we mangurated last year was also an important source of income."

He said that income from sales rose 1.4 percent to 280 billion nescus last year from 1985 and that Iberia expected to report an improved profit this year, depending largely on such external factors as renewed terrorism, the value of the dollar and the cost of fuel.

The Baker-Hughes merger, an-nounced in October, would create one of the world's largest oil services companies, on the scale of Schlumberger or Halliburton, and would help Baker survive in the embattled sector. But the Justice Department has sued to block the

Mr. Clark said Monday in a telephone interview with the Times from Baker's headquarters in Or-ange, California, "We're still nego-tiating with Justice to try to find a common ground that makes them happy and us happy."

Mr. Clark, 60, transformed Baker from a modest company into a leading industrial enterprise during his 40-year tenure. But his credibility suffered in the early 1980s, analysts said, when he bewed to the view that oil prices would not go

Mobil, Chevron and Shell Net Down in Quarter

NEW YORK - Mobil Corp., the second-largest U.S. oil company, reported Tuesday earnings of $201 million for the fourth quarter of 1986, a decline of 53 percent from a year earlier, because of sharply lower prices for crude oil and natural gas. Earnings for the year, however, rose 35 percent.

The books were bleaker for Chevron Corp. The fourth-ranked U.S. oil company announced a fourth-quarter loss of $86 million after taking a one-time charge of $316 million for oil and gas wells that are no longer economical.

Bond Market

LONDON --- Financial reforms opened up competition in the British government bond market only three months ago, but the Bank of England has already signaled that it will limit the extent that freemarket forces will be allowed to operate, according to analysts.

"It wants to let the markets know that the kind of American-style trading done in New York will not be allowed here," a gilts salesman at a new primary dealer said. Gilts are British government securities.

A hint of the bank's more public role came just before the financial reforms of Oct. 27, known as the Big Bang. Those reforms raised the number of market-makers in the gilt market to 27 from three. Just before the new trading rules were launched, the central bank issued 15 "taplets," or small tranches of previously-issued bonds, to aid trading in the issues. But the most telling signal came last mouth when the bank took the unusual step of issuing a £100 mil-lion ($152.75 million) taplet of an outstanding stock issue, the 104 percent due 1989 that had become scarce and issued a statement to the effect that it made the offering to increase liquidity. Spokesmen for the bank declined to elaborate, but market sources said the move was aimed at discouraging the practice of comerng the market in one stock.

The sources said a new primary dealer, Cater Allen Ltd., had been able to exploit an unusual shortage caused by large-scale conversions longer maturities. Cater Allen offi-cials declined comment.

Traders said that at the time the Bank of England announced the taplet, the 10% percent issue was trading about three points higher than comparable bonds.

Traders said the central bank saw the practice as too similar to those prevalent in the nonregulated Enrobond market "In the old days, the bank would

After Mesa Petroleum is officially liquidated next month, however, the advisers will move into roles as takeover consultants for the partpership, where they will still be restricted to energy-related deals. But they also will be available to handle assignments for a new, unrelated business set up by Mr. Pickens named Booneco.

"It's conceivable Booneco never does anything," Mr. Pickens said, if the Mesa partnership "stays bosy with deals.

But David Batchelder, a takeover strategist at Mesa who is one of the three Pickens advisers, said that the unit was created by Mr. Pickens so he could independently pursue and finance takeovers in other industries "As long as there are underva-

Craig, 36, and Sidney Tassin, 30, essentially serve as Mr. Pickens's investment bank-ers. They split $4 million in fees from Mesa's $750 million friendly takeover of Pioneer last year.

In Booneco, the fees could be much higher, Mr. Batchelder said, but still lower than most charged

He has debts of $55 million, much of which was spent to increase his stake in Mesa over the years, he said. His stake, now approximately 5 percent of Mesa's equity, is worth about $80 million. In 1985, the last year for which figures are available, Mr. Pickens earned a salary of $1.2 million plus a bonus of $3 million and a deferred bonus related to the Phillips and Unocal transactions of another $4.2 million.

"I damn sure haven't been greedy in these deals," he said. "All of the bonuses before went right back into the business."

Mr. Pickens suggested that this was a bargain for Mesa investors. He said that Mesa had one of the highest average rates of total return on capital of any energy company over the last 10 years: an annua rate of 25 percent.

Despite his aversion to exploration for now, Mr. Pickens is an optimist on energy prices.

In contrast, Tuesday's issue is set to yield 1/16 point over the threemonth London interbank offered rate. Some dealers speculated that the issue was not likely to be widely tradeable, although it was quoted in when-issued trading at 99.985, within its fees of 5 basis points.

Also issued during the day was three-year, 50 million Australian dollar bond for Bergen Bank. The issue, which carries a coupon of 15 percent, was priced at 101.5.

Despite the unusually high coupon — most Australian issues in the past few months have offered rates below 15 percent -- investor interest was scant. It was quoted in when issued trading at a discount of 1 15/16 percent, well outside its fees of 11/2.

Traders attributed the hikewarm reception to the lack of familiarity with the borrower, a Norwegian bank, and a surplus of Australian dollar paper.

TN 1770, Captain James Cook claimed posssion of the eastern coast of Anstralia, which he and his men had been the first Europeans to sight, in the name of George III. The actual process of colonization began about 18 years later, when a fleet of 11 British ships sailed into what was soon to be called Sydney Harbor. On board, along with the crews, were 736 convicts (188 of them women) and the marines who had been sent to gnard them.

Whatever the harsh facts, most colonies have been founded to the accompaniment of a se-ductive myth, of predictions that they would turn out to be Eden or Eldorado. Australia, by contrast, was born under a dark star. Despite the various economic and strategic arguments that were put forward, it was penal policy that proved decisive when it came to following up Cook's claim. The new settlement was concrived of as a dumping ground for criminals— a replacement, in this respect, for the lost American colonies

Over the next 80 years more than 160,000 convicts were to be shipped out. That is the bare statistic. What they meant in human terms is the subject of "The Fatal Shore," Robert Hughes's masterly new study of the course of the convict system in Australia from its Georgian beginnings to its last Victorian gasp. Already widely known as an art critic, Hughes now reveals formidable gifts as a social historian: he has felt his way back into the past with passion and insight, mined an enormous mass of material, and welded the results of his researches into a commanding narrative. Hughes carefully delineates the social world of those who were transported and the conditions they endured on the voyage out, backing up his generalizations wherever possible with telling detail. In his account of what happened to them once they reached Australia he draws

Working-Class Parcells Radiates Class That Works

By Tony Kornheiser

ANAHEIM, California Let's not talk about dynasties or geniuses, about ferocious defenses or blond quarterbacks. Just for the moment, let's talk about a regular guy, a waddly guy from New Jersey who's so secure in his authority and at such peace with his command that he lets his troops douse him with Gatorade affection requires getting wet. Bill Parcells of the New York Giants, champions of the National Football League, is the kind of coach John Madden saw when he looked in the mirror - an unpretentious, fat guy in a windbreaker and sneakers.

I don't want to belabor the democratizing symbolism of the Ga-torade bath, because it wouldn't work if the Giants hadn't won so consistently, and it might not work if a gem of a man like Harry Carson wasn't doing the dumping. But you have to remember we're talking about a ritual, however charming, that's essentially a public demeaning, and football coaches are not traditionally tolerant of such behavior.

Can you picture Tom Landry or Don Shula or Bill Walsh taking off his headset to facilitate the prank about to befall him? How about Mike Ditka? He'd drop Carson in his tracks. How about Joe Gibbs, a man who refers to himself publicly as "Coach Gibbs?"

There's a posturing and formal-ity about most football coaches that Parcells doesn't seem chained to. His players can call him fat and nickname him bucket of moisture on him and still never forget he's the coach about all the beer he drinks. Genand gives the orders.

Real men don't have to be tyrants. Maybe large men come to that knowledge easier than small men. Parcells weighs about 250 pounds (113.5 kilograms). "I lost six pounds this trip," said. That's like throwing a deck chair off the Queen Mary, though." That kind of self-deprecating humor helped him fashion an atmosphere of mutual respect and fun - not fear - similar. I suspect, to how it was in Oakland under Madden. And like Madden, Parcells worked his way up the ladder from the inside, a guy on the line who became a foreman. "He was one of us before he was one of them," Carson said proudly. Invariably, relationships are altered by promotions, but Parcells may be one of those gifted managers who can sustain the rapport.

It's not easy to be a coach in New York (even if you're really in New Jersey) these days. Neither the press nor the public is patient. Coaches there often head for the bunker the day they sign the contract. Bill Arnsparger and Ray Perkins dug in so deep they had to have their air pumped in. Parcells replaced Perkins and was 3-12-1 his first season. He beat the odds just by having a second season.

Sure, the Giants look like a great team now. But some of their biggest stars are controversial. Mark Bavaro and Joe Morris are dedicated players, but one is all but noncommunicative and the other was a training-camp holdout. Phil Simms has been booed with venomous consistency, Lawrence Taylor is a sensational talent, but even after being treated for dependency Tuna" and dump bucket after on drugs and alcohol he still blissfully brags on national television eral Manager George Young handed Parcells the tools, but it was Parcells' gentle, steady stroke that built the house.

His victory over Denver in Sunday's Super Bowl is one that should be cheered by workingclass coaches all over. One of their own hit the number. Parcells wasn't a great athlete who became a coach while waiting for a spot in the TV booth to open up. All he ever wanted to do was coach. He's the journeyman who rode his apprenticeship wherever it wandered from Hastings College in Nebraska, to Wichita State, Army. Florida State, Vanderbilt, Texas Tech, Air Force, the New England Patriots, the Giants - and finally earned the sobriquet "craftsman. He's the honest worker who proves that the possibilities they say exist really do exist. Parcells was asked what he was thinking toward the end of the Super Bowl. "I don't want to sound dramatic," he said, "but this is the honest truth. With about one minute to go, I thought back to my first game at Hastings College in 1964. We were playing Colorado School of Mines. It was my first coaching job. We won, 24-0. I might be wrong, but I don't think so. Defensive coaches remember shutouts,"

He smiled warmly and continued, "I thought about that and about how the whole stadium at Hastings would fit into about half a section at the Rose Bowl."

At that moment, with the diamonds and rubies in his hands. that Parcells could be struck by how far he'd come - and how tenuous the balance is something good and, one hopes,

The Italians take Rose Reilly, captain of First Division champion Trani, seriously enough to try to nationalize her to join the national team. And once they saw Kerry Davis scoring spectacularly in the European championship, Lazio of-fered her £225 ($342) a week plus free living quarters in Rome.

Most Englishmen are unaware that there is a bona fide, UEFAapproved women's European upiouship, never mind that England won it in 1984. Britons have to buy foriegn manuals to guage the quality of their girls.

The 1983 Swedish soccer guide unveils, in its 42-page section on damfotboll, Kerry Davis's overhead scoring style amid 161 photographs of action and teams.

me a life. I don't expect Mark Hateley or Ray Wilkins came to Italy for the same money, but its O.K. for me." Shy and rather immature for her 23 years, Davis follows her instincts. She always knew soccer was what she did best. As a child in the English midlands she played soccer with the boys, although "Home and Away" focused tightly on a visit to Rome by her big sister. "My sister — she's a lady and I'm a tomboy," said Davis. "She hates football. We're different in

Connors Is Branded 'Mr. Nice Guy'

led a pack of boorish athletes to earn TV Guide's "Mr. Nice Guy" award for 1986, the U.S. television magazine announced Monday.

In winning the mock honor, Country beat out Dave Kingman, the Oakland singger who gift-wrapped a live rat for a woman reporter, and Dennis (Oil Can) Boyd, the temperamental Boston pitcher The magazine said Connors won the annual award "sitting down" - which, during the lifth set of a semifinal match at the International Players Championships, is just what he did.

Connors disputed a linesman's call. The unspire backed the linesman, but Connors refused to continue playing. He was pe-nalized a point for stalling, so he sat down. Again asked to re-runner-up award. sume, he again refused and was penalized a game.

The tournament referee and RADNOR, Pennsylvania — chief supervisor then asked him to continue play. But "he reducing a match with Ivan Lendl, led a pack of boorish athletes to the impression tennis isn't big enough to default Jimmy Con-nors," wrote TV Guide. The match ended in default; Connors was fined $25,000 and suspended for 10 weeks. His action earned him top honors "for opening new vistas," the magazine said. "What Connors has set up in sports is a bond that fans will ask promoters to post, guaranteeing a finish to every event." Kingman capped a long-running feud with reporter Susan Fornoff by sending a neatly wrapped package to the press

Texas Court Places 2 Mets On Probation

The Associated Press HOUSTON — New York Met pitcher Ron Darling and infielder Tim Teufel pleaded no contest Monday to reduced misdemeanor charges of resisting arrest stemming from an altercation with police officers here last summer.

As part of a plea-bargain arrange ment, a Harris County court dismissed misdemeanor charges against pitchers Bob Ojeda and Rick Aguilera. Darling, 26, and Teufel, 28, were fined $200 each and placed on one-year probation. If they successfully complete the probation (whose terms were not announced), their records will be cleared.

after a confrontation with off-duty police, who said the incident began when Tenfel left a nightchib with an alcoholic drink. Ojeda and Aguilera were charged with hindering appre-heasion; Darling and Teutel were charged with felony assault.

Unseen Moments on TV

By Russell Baker NEW YORK — Moments we will never see on television,

Anson Snade, game-show host of 'Squeal With Greed," cries in boens ecstasy when the Big Greed Board lights up.

"You, Alphonse Ferguson," he cries, "have won it all! This one-ofa-kind package of magenta-colored aluminum siding! This custom-made set of stainless steel electrical toenail clippers! This gorgeous lav-ender Styrofoam replica of Ameri-ca's beloved and historic old hundred-gallon wooden rain barrel what a conversation piece for your living room - and that's not all, Alphonse -- do you mind if I call you Alphonse? - you also win Ferguson interrupts: "I didn't come on this show and make a squealing fool of myself before the whole country just for a bunch of junk, Snade. I want cash." Snade (frantic gestures for producer to go to commercials): "Hah hah! Isn't he wonderful, folks?" Ferguson pulls a fully loaded flame thrower. "Cut me off before I get my money, Snade, and the Big Greed Board is instant cinder," he says, announcing he will auction his prizes to the audience.

Nobody bids, so Anson Snade makes a deal: $17.50 for the lot and Snade pays the private trash carter to get it to the dump.

Eppa Cray is visibly affected by participating in this historic occa-sion and awed by being in the presence of an anchorman. "How does

"Tell me honestly, Beady," says Spangler Sump, "exactly how much does fulfilling this lifelong nbition actually mean to you?" "Exactly?" he says. "You've got to know exactly — exactly how much it means to me?"

You can see Spangler Sump's old pro instincts warning him he may have to replace Beady fast with the next guest, one Della Robbia, a woman pole vaulter who plans to schieve fame in Ripley's "Believe It or Not" by climbing Everest, then Ne-vanting over the tip.

Spangler Sump obviously wants

"About 36 or 37," says Beady. "Not as much as 40. We're talking metric, of course."

Eimi Yamada's Japanese Love Story

By Christine Chapman

POKYO — "My story is an L old-fashioned love story," insists Eini Yamada, the 27-yearold author of the erotic best-seller "Bedtime Eyes," a novella about the love affair between Kim, a Japanese girl, and a black American serviceman nicknamed

But he is good at loving my body, never my heart," the story begins, as Kim recalls meeting Spoon at a club on a U.S. Navy base. Kim watches Spoon play pool. "His glass, filled with Seven and Seven, which looks now only like a glass in a urine examination, then shone gold as if it were honey dripping through his black fin-gers. He seemed to be touching something with his other hand in his pocket." Spoon is feeling his silver spoon. At the end of the first chapter he and Kim make love in a boiler room. At the end of the novel, with his arrest as a spy, only the silver spoon is left for

The point of the brief novel is to depict her unexpected emo-tions, but it is the immediacy of the writing — and its explicit sex-uality — that has made "Bedtime Eyes" a sensation.

"Bedtime Eyes" is not yet translated, but the language is a combination of simple Japanese and English words. Yamada explains her infatuation with printed English expletives in the book as sounding "very musical."

Many Japanese men reading
"Bedtime Eyes" are shocked that a young woman could have written it. Women call it simply "frank."

"Bedtime Eyes" won Bungei magazine's annual New Writers Award in December 1985. Published in hardcover by the Kawade Company, and now in its 19th printing, it has sold 250,000 copies. In March, "Bedtime Eyes" will come out in paperback; in April, a film based on the book will be released, starring Kanako Higuchi as Kim, the jazz singer, and the New York actor Michael Wright as Spoon, who turns Kim on to sex and cocsine, then runs away from the base to live with her when he is suspected of being a spy. The Manhattan Jazz Quartet is composing the film score.

second book, "Jessie's Backbone," were nominated last year for the highly regarded Aku-tagawa Prize for fiction by new writers. Neither won it. Later, Yamada's story of her childhood, "Cho-Cho-san no Tensoku" (Madame Butterfly's Bound Feet), was also placed before the jury, which decided not to award the prize to anyone. "Bedroom Eyes" has sparked a literary furor that divided the critics and made Eimi Yamada a media celebrity.

"Here is something truly new, the birth of a fresh reality," wrote one admiring critic. "It may be the start of a literary revolution." Another, less impressed, said that the attention attracted by the book "reflects nothing more than media hype, centering on the fact that the author is living with a black American. The novel is but another unfortunate sign of the Meanwhile, Yamada smile and shakes her head when asked if the man she is living with is like Spoon. Laughing, she said: "The good parts are true, not the drugs or the spying. During an interview in their apartment near Yokota Air Base in western Tokyo, Yamada was diffident, deferring often to her companion, Air Force Technical Sergeant Calvin Wilson, of Wilson, North Carolina. He too became a minor celebrity when he appeared with Yamada on television and in magazine photo-graphs. Proud of her, he believes the book and the film version of Bedtime Eyes" will "tell the Japanese people about American Gls living with Japanese girls." Yamada admits that she is still hazukashii, ashamed or embarrassed, by media attention, but claims the relationship is not un-

"I have many girlfriends who told me about their time with black soldiers," Yamada ex-plained. "I had a black boyfriend after high school. I felt people's animosity. I was cussed out." "To Japanese the black man is a sex symbol," Yamada said.

Eimi Yamada: "I just wrote a story about a black man."

"Also, Japanese guys have preju-dice against blacks, but Americans are even more prejudiced."

Yamada admires the writing of James Baldwin, especially "Another Country," and Ralph Ellison. Her Spoon is not an invisible man, but he is not given a real

The portrayal of this black sol-dier in Yamada's novel is unique in Japanese literature, according to the American critic Margaret Mitsutani, an assistant professor of English at Tokyo Institute of Technology, who introduced Ya-mada to foreign readers in the summer issue of the Japan Quarterly. "Japanese readers were startled at her way of portraying a black soldier," Mitsutani said.

"He's a human being, not a foreign object or an animal like the eign object or an ani character in earlier fiction. It's a convincing, very natural portray-

"While I was writing, I just wrote a story about a black man. I didn't intend to distinguish him from others. Leter I noticed I was in fact writing about the differences between them." Yamada the 110-page "Bedtime Eyes." She visited the U.S. naval base at Yokosuka, south of Tokyo, several times "to get the scene and

"When I'm writing, I'm very serious about the words. When I'm talking, I'm not." Eimi Yamada was born Futaba Yamada (Eimi is the Japanese version of her nickname, Amy) in 1959, the first of three daughters in a middle-class Tokyo family. Her family lives now in Utsuno miya, a city north of Tokyo, where she and Calvin Wilson and his son spent the New Year hali-days. Yamada may have been a bungaku-shojo — in Japanese lit-erary tradition, a young girl who aspires to be a writer. But her well-publicized background in Tokyo's night scene and her "anti-literary pose," as Mitsutani describes it, separate her from that traditio "Yamada is a writer of experi-ences, not of intellect," Mitsutani

After two years at Meiji University in Tokyo, where she stud-ied Japanese literature, Eimi Ya-mada left to become a cartoonist for a girls' romantic comic magazine. After three years of drawing cartoons, she became a hostess at a night club in the Ginza. The job paid well, and she stayed for four

While writing "Bedtime Eyes," she worked in a nightclub as dancer and took part in an "underground performance."

"I just did it for the money," Yamada said of her three mouths In the last year she has been a

"celebrity ande" for the Japanese edition of Penthouse magazine and has modeled for Playboy. She also completed six other books after "Bedtime Eyes" appeared: another three for her orig-mal publisher and three more for other major companies. Only two were love stories. Now she is finishing number eight, "A Comfortable Tropical Chair," about a Japanese woman writer in Bali and the Indonesians she meets. It will be published in May.

The Day That Churchill Almost Went Bankrupt

The American financier Bernard Beruch saved Winston Churchill from becoming a pauper in 1929, a historian says in American Heritage magazine. Churchill "dropped into Baruch's office and decided to play the market, and as prices tum-bled, he plunged deeper and deeper, trying to outguess the stock ex-change," the historian William Manchester wrote. Churchill said he would have to sell everything, including his country estate, and drop out of politics to enter business to recoup his losses. But Chur-chill lost nothing because Baruch, a friend who called Churchill "a born losing gambler," had left instructions to buy equivalent stocks every time Churchill sold his, and to sell whenever Churchill bought. "Winston had come out exactly even because, he later learned, Baruch even paid the commissions," Man-
